...ly-lines, on each... employees worked, with... duction lines each of which is manned with 25 persons. Each of these small groups is responsible for the complete assembly and final check of the typewriters produced.

The result for the individual employee is that the monotonous repetition of a few motions has been replaced by a multiplicity of activities.
The individual has more responsibility and also an opportunity to rotate the kind of job he does and thus learn several stages of the assembly process.
The average length of the work process was extended from seven to eleven minutes.

Each group has considerable latitude as to how it organises its work.
Work-positions are no longer arranged in one long row but in the shape of a letter M. Each group has its own corner for breaks and for discussions. The picture of a humane working atmosphere is rounded out by comfortable chairs, coloured partitions, flowerpots, a cafeteria. IBM in West Berlin has committed itself to creating a more humane working atmosphere. The experiment is a year old. Opinion polls have revealed that IBM employees appreciate the new style, particularly the increased responsibility. Absenteeism and job-changing have declined. The quality time, the cost of each job...
20 per cent higher, a high price for the
... for work, but one which ... world's largest computer manu-
... afford.

... absenteeism and the high rate of turnover among Volvo's assembly-line workers had risen so ominously that the cost-saving effect of the assembly-lines was cancelled out. In view of a 17 per cent absenteeism quota and a 50 per cent average annual labour force turnover in the main works, for example, wage costs rose so steeply that the conversion to the new and more human production technology became necessary in order to cut costs.

After the assembly-line was abolished, absenteeism fell to below five per cent and job changing to ten per cent. However, it remains to be seen whether absenteeism and fluctuations in the work force will go back on the increase. When Volvo workers have become accustomed to the more comfortable work process, it is not to be excluded - human nature being what it is - that discontent will again increase in time. Visitors from rival firms have expressed doubts that the new and expensive production process will prove economically viable in the long run.

Nevertheless, major German firms are also experimenting with "job enrichment", as such measures are termed in America. At Daimler Benz, for example, engines and gears are no longer being built on the assembly-line but by group. The Klöckner-Moeller Comp. in Bonn, which the assembly-line... completely by the end of the year.

This rebellion
... the mon-
... amounts to a

... born in 1856,
... and motion study.
... we work per-

At the end of the previous century and the beginning of the present century the demand for work was so great that - simply to earn a living - workers were content with jobs which even a trained gorilla could do. That is all different today. In the Federal Republic in particular labour had become scarce. The time was ripe for scientific research into the damage to human health caused by such one-sided, monotonous work. Last year people went on strike for the first time for better working conditions.

The Bonn government also took up this topic. It recently submitted to the Bundesrat, the upper chamber of parliament, a draft work-place ordinance, which would require employers to provide recreation rooms, rest rooms for mothers-to-be, changing-rooms, as well as wash-rooms and toilets. Where employees are subject to unbalanced physical stresses in their work, employers would have to provide facilities for physical exercise to correct this.

Norbert Blüm, the CDU's social policy expert, is among the toughest critics of modern working conditions.
He says that "in general no jobs should be accepted in which an employee cannot develop a minimum of qualification". Bad, dirty jobs should be so expensive that employers would no longer offer them. "Cost pressure accelerates the abolition of inhuman Federal Republic. Although in the tries - the economy is faced with an enormous cost burden, so that prices are constantly rising, Blüm makes a positively heretical demand. "We and economic development in which are," he says, "in a stage of technical we can do without possible productivity for points of increased productivity for ... more humane working
